Information for Trainee

The Specialist Training Program (STP) is an Australian Government initiative that helps to fund accredited specialist training rotations in settings beyond traditional public teaching hospitals.

The program aims to increase the number of doctors progressing to fellowship as specialists by:

- Increasing the capacity of the health workforce to train specialists.
- Providing specialists with training that matches demand and reflects the way health services are delivered.
- Developing networked specialist-training arrangements, which are:
 - An integrated series of accredited training sites focused on health care, through which trainees may rotate in the pursuit of specialist qualification.
 - Based on health-service delivery requirements of a region with the education potential of training sites matched to the health-service delivery potential inherent in increased availability of a specialist trainee workforce.
